Guest Speaker: Natalie Elizabeth

Natalie hails from a family farm in southern Manitoba where she could often be found crouched in the dirt, overturning rocks. Throughout the years she has bounced back and forth between remote locations and densely populated urban areas building green spaces for plants and people.

Some of her favourite things to share and learn are: traditional food processing skills such as fermentation, soil microbiology, seed saving, herbal medicine, and the cultural history of farming around the world.

Topic: The Many Yields of the Urban Landscape

Join Natalie Elizabeth of Urban Eatin for a new twist on the home garden. Drawing primarily from her experience in garden design, homestead living, herbalism and traditional food preservation, Natalie will present gardens that incorporate both form and multiple functions. Come take a walk through the garden seasons and explore the vast potential of urban spaces from habitat to harvest.
